10 MEN AND A MARSHAL!

U. S. MARSHAL, Ransom Kent, was angry. It wasn't funny at all to come to a place like Rawlins, Wyoming, to clean out a bunch of rustlers and murderers, for the federal government, and then have the train he was on held up by that very gang of men. He picked himself off the ground, and dusted off his trousers, whipping his Stetson against the whipcord with a cold fury in each motion. He slipped his .45 back into its holster, and the sixgun slid easily into the greased holster. He shaded his eyes against the waning sunlight and looked down the tracks at the five men who lay dead. Further in the distance he could see the dust puffed up by the escaping owlhoot gang. There were ten of them in all. Ransom Kent swore silently to himself that he would get those ten masked men.

He walked down past the stalled cars, his eyes scanning the ground. If only there was a clue to who those men were. They were known only as the Stocton Gang, and no one knew where they hid out or who the men were under those bandannas. He searched carefully, for half an hour, and found nothing. Over near the baggage car he saw the small knot of passengers clustered around the old porter who had been knocked out by the badmen. Kent shouldered his way over to the conductor who was standing there.

"What'd they get, conductor?" asked the marshal.

The conductor scratched his stubby chin. "Robbed all the passengers. Took the miners' payroll. And the porter over here says they took a couple of boxes of ammunition bound fer Fort Steele."

Ransom Kent looked over the floor of the baggage car. Some of the passengers' bags were lying on the floor. He went over and looked at the broken boxes. There was a piece of broken boxwood with the black numerals "32" painted on it.

The porter staggered over to where Kent was looking and the man said: "Thet reminds me. 'Fore they conked me with thuh gun-butt, I heared one of them sidewinders say they wuz outta ammunition at the hideout. Mebbe that's why they broke in here."

"Did they say anything else about their hideout?" snapped Ransom.

The old porter scratched his head. "M-mm, come tuh think of it, one of them masked hombres said they better get back tuh the hills afore dark."

Ransom Kent slapped his thighs. "Good, old timer! That means they can't be too far from Rawlins, cause it'll be dark in an hour. Now we're getting somewhere. Hey, Conductor, how soon'll we get into Rawlins? I got to talk to the sheriff."

"Come into town in three-quarters of an hour."

"Good," said Kent. Then he slumped into one of the seats, as the train lurched. He had some thinking to do . . .

In Rawlins, Wyoming, the sheriff was Lars Newton, a tall, wiry character with a friendly face and a big smile. He looked up from his steak and eggs into the hard blue eyes of Ransom Kent. Then he saw the marshal-badger on Kent's shirt and he smiled.

"Hello there. You must be Kent, the government man." He held out his hand.

"Glad to meet you, Sheriff," said Kent. "I just ran into some of your local bad boys. I guess you heard."

The sheriff nodded and took a mouthful of food. When he swallowed, he wiped his lips and said: "Think it was the Stocton Gang?"

"Don't rightly know," said Kent, "but I guess it's a good hunch."

The sheriff nodded again, and went on eating.

Kent drummed his fingers idly on the table. He thought back over the events of the robbery. There was something in the back of his mind that was bothering him. Something that was not right. He went over the sights and sounds, the shooting and screaming. No it was not there. It was something that had happened afterward. Somewhere in his mind, there was a clue. He had to get away by himself and think it out.

He turned to the sheriff. "Got a horse I can borrow?"

The sheriff nodded. "Sure, but you ain't thinkin' of going after that gang, alone, are yuh?"

"That's my job," said the marshal.

"But even if you knew where to find them, in those hills, they'd cut you to ribbons..."

"That," said Kent, "is part of the risk a marshal has to take."

It was dark. The sky was studded with diamond stars, and Ransom let the black have its own way as they rode slowly through the Wyoming hills. Here, in the lonely night, a man could think. The cool night air refreshed the mind and let things fall into place more easily than when there were a lot of people around talking and shouting. A man had to be alone to think. He roamed the hills all night — travelling in widening circles in the hills — and watched the dawn break overhead.

Kent knew that a lawman had to figure out all the angles to a job, and you had to figure them before you went into action. Anyone who just rushed into a shootout would surely end up with a bad case of lead poisoning from a .45 and fill out a coffin in boothill.

Suddenly he saw it. A thin curl of smoke against the morning sky. He spurred his mount, and half an hour later he came on a cabin hidden in the slash of a canyon. He ground-hitched his horse, and crept up on foot. Through the window he could see them, up already. He counted ten. There were ten men who'd held up that train and run off with jewelry, money, and the boxes of ammunition.

"Ammunition!"

Now he knew what it was that had been bothering him. He smiled to himself. He moved quickly back to where he'd left the horse. Then he fired a shot through the window of the cabin.

A shriek of pain told him that he'd had a lucky hit. That left nine to account for. In a few seconds, gunfire answered him from the cabin. One of the men ran out the door, and Kent sent him to the ground with a slug in the belly. After a few minutes, the answering fire from the cabin stopped. Kent knew why, and his smile broadened.

He picked his Winchester from the saddle-boot, and setting it carefully against his cheek began to fire at the crude-brick chimney. Soon big chunks would begin to fall into the cabin, and no more smoke would be coming out.

When this happened, he shouted to the cabin. "Yuh better come out now with your hands reaching for the sky."

Only silence answered him.

"You boys better give up now, and let me take you back. I'm a government man, and you'll get a fair trial. Otherwise some of those boys from Rawlins will be settin' up a little necktie party." There was no answer. Then he continued; he played his ace.

"You boys can't hold out this time. You got ammunition from the train yesterday, but you know it won't do you any good."

He chuckled. Now they knew that he knew, and that there would be no bluff. He felt ashamed of himself for not having thought of it sooner, a man who was as gun-conscious as he was. They couldn't use .32 calibre bullets any more than he could, and that's what they had taken out of the baggage car. Those were shells for Fort Steele, for the ladies who like to do a little practice shooting — with thirty-two's. Those owlhoots wouldn't be seen dead carrying a .32. They used .44's or .45's like he did.

He felt good inside when the eight robbers came out of the cabin with their arms over their heads, choking and crying from the black smoke. He would certainly say that he'd smoked the rats out of their hole.

AND I CAUGHT UP WITH YUH AN' TURNED YOU OVER TO THE TRIBE FER SOME HIDE TANNIN'!

WAL, AIN'T NO USE TALKIN' ABOUT OLD TIMES! TOO BAD THEM BUZZARDS WON'T HAVE MUCH TO PICK FROM!

YOU WON'T BE NEEDIN' THIS WATER, COLT! THAR'S ENOUGH HERE TO GET ME ACROSS THE DESERT INTO COLLADOS!

YOU'LL NEVER REACH COLLADOS, DEVLIN!

I'M GLAD STEEL RAN OFF WHEN DEVLIN JUMPED ME... BUT I SHORE WISH HE WAS AROUND NOW!

COME ON, BOY!... GOOD BOY! HURRY... HURRY!

MAN AND HORSE PLOD THROUGH THE SCORCHING SANDS OF THE BARREN WASTELAND AS A MERCLESS SUN PARCHES THEIR THROATS AND CRACKS THEIR SKIN...

A FEW MINUTES LATER THE OUTLAW STUMBLES ACROSS THE FIRST VICTIM OF THE REMORSELESS DESERT...

LUKE DEVLIN'S HOSS!...MESSE THIS IS A WARNING! DEVLIN'S GOT A LITTLE WATER...BUT I AIN'T!

FETCH WATER, STEEL!...WATER... UNDERSTAND? BRING WATER BACK IN THIS BAG... UNDERSTAND, BOY?

I'VE MADE MY FIRST MISTAKE FORGETTING TO TAKE EXTRA WATER...AND IT MAY BE MY LAST!

BUT THE OUTLAW TURNS INTO THE DESERT AND CONTINUES TO TRACK DOWN HIS QUARRY...

DEVLIN'S GETTIN' BUSHED...HE'S BEGINNIN' TO STAGGER! HE'LL BE HOLIN' UP FER THE NIGHT PRETTY SOON!

HE'S UP THERE...PROBABLY WATCHIN' ME! I BETTER SKIRT AROUND AND PICK SOME HIGH SPOT BEFORE I CLOSE IN ON HIM!

AS THE OUTLAW REACHES THE CREST OF A NEARBY HILL, HIS EYES SUDDENLY SHARPEN...

WATER!...EITHER DEVLIN DOESN'T KNOW IT'S THERE...OR HE TOOK THAT HIGH SPOT TO KEEP ME FROM GETTIN' TO THE WATERHOLE! I'LL FIND OUT SOON ENOUGH!

CAUTIOUSLY, USING EVERY PIECE OF COVER THAT PROVIDES ITSELF, THE OUTLAW INCHES TOWARDS THE PRECIOUS WATER.

SUDDENLY...

I COULD HAVE KILLED YOU, COLT... BUT I'D RATHER SEE YOU DIE SLOW AN' HARD! GET AWAY FROM THAT WATER!

I'LL... NEVER... MAKE IT! GOTTA... GET WATER SOMEHOW!

A PALE MOON R DRES THE SKIES, ITS BALEFUL RAYS BATHING THE DESERT AND IMMOBILIZING TWO WATCHFUL MEN...

NO USE TRYIN' TO REACH THAT WATERHOLE NOW!... TOO MUCH MOONLIGHT! I GOTTA... TRY SOMETHING ELSE... BEFORE DAWN!

DAWN CASTS AWAY THE SHADOWS OF THE NIGHT...

MESBE COLT'S DEAD BY NOW!... I GOT A FEW GOOD SLUGS LEFT IN HERE... ENOUGH TO HOLD ME FER ANOTHER DAY OR SO!

THE OUTLAW STAGGERS WEARILY TO THE WATERHOLE AS LUKE DEVLIN'S BODY KICKS, JERKS AND WRITHES IN DEATH AGONY...

AND AS THE OUTLAW SINKS HOPELESSLY TO THE GROUND...
